Carotenoid Complex

IMMUNE BOOSTING NUTRIENTS FROM FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

Are You Protecting Yourself?

Real Risk. Real Solution

While there is no shortage of calories in our diets, the key nutrients that promote health and protect us against chronic diseases are missing. Our bodies need carotenoids in our diets for optimal functioning of key markers of immune capacity, including natural killer cell and lymphocyte proliferation responses.

We've been told for years that we need to "strive for five" servings of fruits and vegetables every day. Now the USDA guideline has raised the bar, stressing the importance of 5-13 servings or more each day.

When phytonutrients such as carotenoids are lacking, we are left unprotected from free-radical induced oxidative stress that may lead to immune compromise and the development of chronic diseases including cancer, diabetes, and heart disease.

THE PROBLEM:

90% of us don't eat the recommended 5-13 servings of fruits and vegetables.

Fruit & Vegetable Nutrients Boost Immunity

The importance of fruit and vegetable consumption for overall health, maximizing longevity, and warding off chronic disease is well known. Virtually all modern recommendations for healthy eating include increasing our daily intake of fruits and vegetables.

It's guite simple: When humans eat plants, the phytonutrients in the plants provide nutrition to our cells and may protect them from dangerous elements, even carcinogens, and provide much needed support to our immune systems.

Carotenoids Are Kev

Research has pointed to the immune-boosting power of nutrients known as carotenoids—which are lipid soluble phytonutrients found in red, orange, yellow, and deep green fruits and vegetables—that have long been known as immune modulators. Carotenoids maximize the body's natural defense systems which may lower the risk of disease development.*1
